

We uncover the biggest Bangladeshi habit – Paan!

EMDAD RAHMAN

Bangladeshis have always been a colony of betelnut addicts. ‘My’ extensive and ‘paranormal’ research studies show that betelnut sessions help the secretion of our brains opiates, drugging us often to the point of excitement or euphoria.

Our obsession with individuality and individual freedom, accompanied by loneliness, is nothing but a major source of stress – related brain opiates.

The Good Samaritan...

Those of you old and wise enough as yours truly will love this one. When I was at school I was a big fan of Aminur Rahman and his “Dunia Ulti Gese”. One of my favourite scenes is when a kind hearted Samaritan unexpectedly decides to play the reluctant hero. He assumes that a deshi auntie is ‘bleeding/ seeping or spitting blood from the mouth. Full of empathy for a fellow human he hails an ambulance in desperation.

▣ Betelnutters paradise

Written by Emdad Rahman
Friday, 13 June 2008 23:30 -

